Plan Your Garden with Spring in Mind

A successful spring garden starts before the first seed is sown. Whether your passion is a basket full of ripe vegetables or beautifully blooming flowers, here are some tips to get you started before you get your hands dirty.

Identify Your Planting Site

Typically, a planting site with hours of sun exposure is going to be the most preferable for a wide range of plants. However, starting with this very basic step allows you to choose the plants most likely to thrive.

Envision the Bloom

Take into consideration what your garden will look like at the height of the growing season. If planting flowers, will they bloom throughout the season, or are you planning one massive bloom during the spring or summer. For vegetables, consider what may crowd together and what can take the place of early maturing vegetables.

Start Indoors

We recommend starting seeds indoors about 4 to 6 weeks before planting outdoors. For gardeners in colder climates, a good rule of thumb is 4 to 6 weeks before the last expected frost date. Our Bio Dome (page 90) is offered in three sizes and is sure to meet your indoor growing needs.

Successfully Transplant

After the first true leaves have developed and the last frost has come and gone, it's time to transplant. We recommend preparing their new habitat first, with their new homes already dug out of well-moistened healthy soil. From there, carefully using your hands, plant at the depth most suited for your plant.
